and fall are generally the 2 most pleasant seasons, although spring time can often present varying temperatures. Fall is often sunny and dry.

Housing: This is very much dependent on how you choose/like to live as well as location. Roommates are easy to find. Options exist from 1 roommate to as many as 5. Cheap studios/apartments may go for 3,000 – 5,000. Nice (better locations) begin at around 5,500 a month. Generally, having at least 1 roommate will get you more bang for your buck.

Food: Local Chinese food is extremely cheap and many tasty delights are available for under 10 yuan. Dining out is likewise an affordable experience. Great meals can be had for 20-50 rmb and will leave you feeling satisfied. Western food exists in spades here, but the prices of course, are higher. Craving a burger? Carl's Jr. may set you back 60 (but it's still affordable). As you can imagine with a city the size of Shanghai, pricier options exist. It all depends on where you eat. Import stores are also available, lying in wait to devour your paycheck. But hey – sometimes we all need a little variety. Try some new dishes to try: soup buns, pepper duck, braised eggplant.

Transportation: Cruising around Shanghai is easy and affordable. Metro rides are usually between 3-4 yuan (depending on how far you are travelling). Taxi rides begin at 14 rmb (during the day, 18 after hours). Mind you, should you live outside the city, the price will go up to travel to and fro (but you will also be saving elsewhere in food and rent).
